In the meantime refer you to the history by the Count of Left.

As you are no doubt aware, I have sat in the Police and Summary Courts this differed on questions of public policy with a large majority of the people of the South since the close of the war. Every Confederate soldier who has dared to do this has been treated as a deserter in war, deserving to be shot. The South has imitated Saturn in devouring his own children. No amount of service of devotion to its cause during the war defying the dominant sentiment of the section since the war. It was for this reason that Wade Hampton, by whose side I have often followed the plume of Sept Stuart in the front of the battle, could sit silently in his seat and permit this calumny, ottered by a man who was himself a Confederate, to go unrebuked. But I am not the only soldier of "the lost cause" whose reputation it has been thought necessary to sacrifice to gratify the rancor of party spirit, General Longstreet-who in the last scene of the great drama might have said, with almost as much truth as Ney did on the frozen banks of the Beresina,-"I am the rear guard of the Grand Army"has been discovered to have been no soldier at all, and one of his critics, who was never distinguished for anything except a habit he had of always keeping where there was no danger of getting hurt, has accused him of treachery at Gettysburg, while he was himself during the battle in the rear with the baggage train. As Longstreet is now a Republican and his great antagonist on that eventful field is the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, I have no doubt but that before the close of the campaign the Southern people will be persuaded to believe that it was Hancock and not Longstreet who led the Virginians in that immortal charge that will forever rank them on glory's page with those

WATERS. (Japan Gasette)

We have read with considerable surprise an article in the Homekong Daily Press of September 24th last, commenting upon the strictures which have lately been made by the China and Japan press upon the condition of the British fleet in these waters. taste, frequently bordering upon offensive vulgarity; and its assumptions are. in nearly every case, utterly incorrect.

and flippantly heaps contempt upon the opinions of all other partialists who ignore the imperanences of our contemporary, and deal at once with its assertions. On one point, namely, the ability of the Hongkong dockward to patch up the Iron Duke after her second mishap during her present commission, there is no necessity to dether; but up in most of the other subjects dealt with, knowing what we have written, we intend to join issue.

In the first part of the article the Lion Duke, whose dements we do not wish further to discuss, has strength attributed to her that she does not possess. The Dally Press speaks of ten makes of armour, whereas the vessel has but as few plates of eight melies, and the restof her armour is but six caches. At the modore B, except as officers entrasted ends the plates are thingar. With this preliminary error before tis, the censure planty risks sound by appar sounds enaddressed to the China Mad and other papers for during to matter opinions full mento and it is the to a question upon subjects concerning which they are

We know of no reasons why the navigas a Pota til tion and movement of ships of war should be exempt from the criticism to which merchant vessels are subjected. and we are quite in a cold with the North China Dady News because it is not the function of a leavy flagship, drawing 25 or 26 feet of water, to make ( 16) a seemingly purposeless ramide in a desolate, and only partially, it at all surveyed, region where the is and of Okushiri-sima is situate. Without any intention to prejudge the case, we have no hesitation in repeating that it the exploration of the coast of Yezo was the object of the cruise, a much smaller vessel than the Iran Duby should have be been chosen. What insurance company, we may ask in all sincerity, would have covered a merchant vessel like the Iron on the west coast of Yezo? And if me of business hesitate to accept the risk, why should Her Map sty's ships incur it i and still be free from reasonable and moderate comment & The whole of the west coast of Japan, particularly worth of the 40th degree, is known to abound with dangers, not the feast of which are the impenetrable fogs that in the openion of an experienced havigator, " are the scourge of this coast during the

After some trielevant allusions to the brave men who have perished, but whose lives might have been eaved had a more rigid system of inspection prevailed over the class of vessel allowed to go to sea, the Dady Press makes a direct attack upon us for calling attention to the unfitness of H M.S. Vigitant, for a voyage in the beginning of the stormy season. Quoting a paragraph from the Japan Gazette of August 11th, the Daily Press adds, "If this is not a piece of impertmence we would like to know what it is." Our contemporary will probably be surprised to learn that the seaworthiness of the Vigilant wa not decided upon by the writer of the paragraph in which the state of the yessel is set forth. Before we hazarded uny opinion on the matter several trustworthy authorities were consulted, one of whom holds a semi-public position of much maritime importance in this port. Reference to the last named authority left no possible doubt as to the unseaworthy state of the Vigilant. "If she were a merchant ship " our informant said, "she would not be permitted to go to sea in her present condition or until after the summer season, say the middle of October. She can only use one paddle; that is, she is partially disabled and utterly unfit to encounter the sea and wind likely to prevail in northern Chinese waters at this season." In calling attention to this we performed a public duty; and we now re-assert unhesitatingly that had the Vigilant been a merchant steamer action could have been taken to prevent her leaving the port, or, at all events, an investigation would have been made to put an end to suspicions about her condition. It Admiral Coote had been the first seaman of any age we should have expressed the same opinion; and it is impossible to avoid the reflection that, if any accident had happened to the Vigilant following the Eurydice and Atalanta, Admiral Coote would have been in a distressing position. We were not, however, singular in our views
